LITERARY COLLECTION

Written on four continents and read on six, the works in this anthology celebrate the birth of a new literary form: the tweet. Ironically, the 140-character limit of the Twitter platform has inspired new and veteran writers alike to stretch traditional boundaries. Some experiment with abbreviated poetic forms. Others create back-story through innuendo. All make every word—every character—count. This collection introduces 43 of these pioneers who venture out each day onto text's narrow windowsill.

Unlike other Twitter-based anthologies, On a Narrow Windowsill is not a collection of jokes or novel synopses. Instead, it brings together stand-alone stories and poems, both comic and tragic, which explore the human condition, as evidenced by the following excerpt:

Flightless

Ben White

Imagine a kiwi. Imagine a bird that could spend its life relentlessly constructing a reality in which it could fly.
That is you. And me.
